I asked her how she could give me such advice, how she could be on my side if I lied on such a serious occasion, taking a dishonest decision, which could send other people to death and make them unhappy.../destroy them.

“How can you imagine”, she cried, “how can you imagine that it is you who decides, that it is because of you and your decision, because of what you will say! Don’t you see that everything has already been decided, that you are nothing else but an instrument-/a tool and they will find another one? You can do nothing but destroy/ All you can do is destroy both yourself and me uselessly, without changing anything.”

“Well, but don’t you realize that I would bring myself to destruction and, if I accepted, that I would never find my peace again, that I could not look people in their eyes? And more than that/ Moreover, I would lose my confidence in everybody while, by not accepting, maybe I would succeed in avoiding something, in repairing an evil, a very great evil. I’d rather destroy myself, willingly, because that is what I wanted and what I believed in.”
